Prime Minister Narendra Modi today said that India is moving ahead with the aim of becoming a developed nation by 2047, and this vision can only be achieved when every state progresses equally. He was addressing a public function in Itanagar after laying the foundation stone of several infrastructure projects in Arunachal Pradesh, including two major hydroelectric power projects worth over ₹3,700 crore. He said the North East region is playing a crucial role in achieving the country's larger developmental goals, and the power sector is one of the best examples of it. Mr. Modi noted that India has set a target of producing 500 GW of electricity from non-conventional sources by 2030 through solar, wind, and hydro projects. He said Arunachal Pradesh is working in parallel with the nation in this direction. He said, the two hydropower projects, whose foundations were laid today, will further strengthen the state's position as a major power producer, generating employment opportunities for thousands of youths and ensuring affordable electricity for developmental activities.
